Council's Fight For Rezoning Of Waterfront For The People

Following an inspection of the waterfront sections of Leichhardt Municipality, the Mayor, Ald. L. Rodwell, said that aldermen expressed a determination to renew their efforts to have parts of the waterfront released from industrial zoning and "restored to the people."

Waterfront Zoning

The statement by the Mayor of Leichhardt (Ald. L. Rodwell) on the question of waterfront zoning will no doubt produce a sharp division of opinion among people working or living in the Balmain peninsula

Whether you agree with it or oppose it would probably depend not so much upon political considerations as upon whether you want to work on the waterfront, or only live there.

And it raises again all the familiar questions:

. Should the resitential aspect generally take second place to industrial on the harbour front?

• Has industry, especially enterprises having maritime association, a prior right to use of the foreshores?

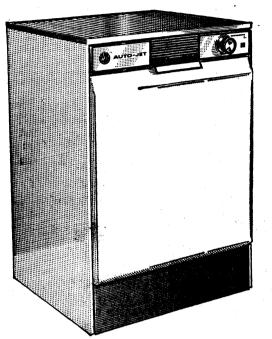

• Or should the magnificent resident-ial aspect be increased by refusing further encroachment by industry on the waterfront, and even returning sections to zoning for homes?

• Or should there be a better balance between industry and residential development, with new buffer areas between the two in the form of parkland?
